Response to The Wall Street Journal

The 25 August 2009 Wall Street Journal article “Four Ways to Help Africa” written by Jendayi E. Frazier, the former US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs should not be taken seriously by the Obama Administration. The former Bush Administration official is trying to cover up her own mistakes and blunders. Suffice it to mention a couple:

- Frazer single handedly derailed the Eritrea Ethiopia border issue and prevented the implementation of the Final and Binding decision of the Eritrea Ethiopia Boundary Commission (EEBC)
- Frazer’s flawed and distorted analysis of the situation in Somalia, coupled with her instigation of the Ethiopian invasion and occupation of Somalia in 2006, remain the root causes of the current problems in Somalia. Frazer is personally responsible for the tragedy that has unfolded in Somalia. Over 20,000 Somalis have been killed and hundreds of thousands of have been injured and maimed and over 2 million have been displaced from their homes and villages as a result of her incompetence and willful behavior.
- Frazer complicated and exacerbated issues in the Congo and the Sudan

The former Bush Administration official who has saddled the Obama Administration with multiple failures in Africa does not have the moral or legal authority to lecture or advise anyone about anything in Africa, least of all the new US Administration.
